Psychology Major

The Program

Psychology is the science of behavior. It covers the mind and behavior of humans, normal and abnormal, across the life span. The field is concerned with the development of principles of behavior and the application of those principles to individuals, society, and the institutions of government, business, and mental health. This diverse field allows for careers in mental health and human services, educational and school settings, research, and consulting. The major explores the variety of specialties including clinical, counseling, forensic, and organizational psychology. The major requires a minimum of 39 credits.

Graduates with a degree in Psychology will be able to:

- Apply, evaluate, and analyze different domains of psychology
- Solve problems by applying previous knowledge to new problems
- Distinguish between pseudoscience and scientific findings
- Write about psychological topics with clarity and logical organization
- Understand psychological phenomena systematically and empirically
- Use qualitative and quantitative research methodologies
- Apply psychological perspectives to a research area such as memory, learning, personality, perception, and psychopathology
